Meridian Holdings Pte. Ltd.

Corporate Expense Reimbursement Policy

Effective 1 September 2026 | Singapore Operations | Version 2.0

1. Purpose and Scope

This document sets out the standards under which Meridian Holdings Pte. Ltd. repays staff for costs reasonably incurred in the course of their duties. It applies to all employees of the Singapore operating entity. Claims are assessed against the sections below; where a cost is not addressed by any section, the claim is referred to Finance Review for a manual determination. This document is reviewed periodically by the Finance function and supersedes all prior versions of the corporate expense policy from its stated effective date.

2. Definitions

For the purposes of this document, the following terms carry the meanings set out below wherever they appear, unless the context plainly requires otherwise.

Claimant. The employee of the Singapore operating entity submitting a request for reimbursement under this document.

Sanctioned. Approved in advance, or otherwise falling within a category of activity this document treats as approved by default, in connection with the Claimant's duties.

Supervisor. The Claimant's direct line manager, or another individual holding equivalent authorisation authority for the Claimant at the relevant time.

Finance. The Finance function of Meridian Holdings Pte. Ltd., responsible for processing, reviewing, and where necessary escalating claims made under this document.

Finance Review. The manual review process conducted by Finance for a claim that cannot be reliably resolved by reference to this document alone.

Home Currency. Singapore Dollars (SGD), the currency in which Meridian Holdings Pte. Ltd. reports and reimburses claims by default.

Repayable / Repayment. Eligible for reimbursement to the Claimant, subject to satisfying the applicable conditions set out in this document.

3. Submission Standards and Evidence

3.2 Documentary Proof Threshold

Every application for reimbursement must be supported by evidence appropriate to its size. Where the sum claimed exceeds SGD 20, the Claimant must attach documentary proof of an itemised nature — that is, a record produced by the vendor at the point of sale that sets out the date, the payee, and a breakdown of what was purchased or consumed. A summary total alone, without itemisation, does not satisfy this requirement once the SGD 20 threshold is crossed. Where the sum claimed is SGD 20 or less, itemised proof is encouraged as good practice but is not compulsory; the Claimant's own account of the expenditure, entered at the time of submission, will generally suffice. This distinction exists because the administrative cost of chasing documentation for very small sums generally exceeds the value of the control it provides. For the avoidance of doubt, this threshold applies per individual transaction, not per reporting period, and does not exempt a Claimant from the substantive eligibility rules found elsewhere in this document. Where documentation is illegible, incomplete, or otherwise cannot be relied upon, refer to the provisions on indeterminate documentary detail rather than treating the absence of proof as a simple submission failure.

Meals, client hospitality and entertainment

4.1 Staff Sustenance Allowance

Reimbursement of day-to-day sustenance purchased by a Claimant while carrying out their duties is available only in defined circumstances. Repayment is permitted where the expenditure is tied to a sanctioned journey undertaken away from the Claimant's usual place of work, to sanctioned hours worked substantially beyond the ordinary working day, or to another rationale that has been recorded in writing at the time of the claim and that a reasonable observer would recognise as connected to the performance of the Claimant's duties. Repayment is capped at SGD 40 per individual for each such occasion of sustenance, regardless of how many items are purchased or how many colleagues share the same bill; where several colleagues dine together without an external party present, the cap applies per person, not per receipt. This is distinct from hospitality extended to an external counterpart, which is addressed separately and carries a materially higher ceiling because it serves a different commercial purpose. A Claimant travelling on an ordinary working day within their usual base of operations, with no extended hours and no other documented rationale, has no entitlement under this clause. Finance may request the underlying itinerary or timesheet where the connection to a sanctioned journey or extended hours is not otherwise apparent from the submission.

4.2 Customer Hospitality (Dining)

Where a Claimant hosts an external counterpart at a dining occasion for a genuine commercial purpose, the cost may be repaid up to SGD 150 for each person present, inclusive of the Claimant. This higher ceiling, relative to ordinary staff sustenance, reflects the relationship-building function such occasions serve. Entitlement under this clause depends on two pieces of information being recorded at the time of submission: the identity of the external counterpart or the organisation they represent, and the commercial rationale for the occasion — for instance, an account review, a contract negotiation, or a relationship-building discussion tied to a live or prospective piece of business. A submission that omits either element cannot be assessed under this clause and will instead be referred back to the Claimant for the missing detail. Where the occasion also involves beverages of an intoxicating nature, refer to the separate provisions on such beverages, which impose additional conditions. Where the total per head materially exceeds the stated ceiling, the excess is not repayable and should be borne personally by the Claimant or absorbed against a specific pre-agreed budget line, which falls outside the scope of this policy.

4.3 Intoxicating Beverages

Beverages of an intoxicating nature are, as a general rule, excluded from reimbursement. This exclusion applies without exception to ordinary staff sustenance under the sustenance allowance provisions: a Claimant may not recover the cost of such beverages consumed in the course of a routine meal taken alone or with colleagues only. A narrow exception exists where the beverages are consumed as part of a dining or hospitality occasion for an external counterpart that otherwise satisfies the applicable hospitality provisions of this document — that is, the counterpart's identity and the commercial rationale have been recorded, and the balance of the occasion is itself compliant. Even within this exception, Finance retains discretion to query a disproportionate share of the total bill attributable to such beverages, and a pattern of claims weighted heavily toward them may be referred for manager review regardless of the technical eligibility of any single claim. This clause should be read together with the provisions on customer hospitality (dining), of which it forms a qualification rather than a standalone entitlement; a claim cannot rely on this clause in the absence of an otherwise-compliant hospitality occasion.

4.4 Service Levies and Gratuities

A service levy applied by an establishment as a compulsory addition to a bill is repayable on the same basis as the underlying cost to which it attaches, provided that underlying cost is itself eligible under the relevant provisions of this document; a compulsory levy attached to an ineligible cost does not itself become repayable. A gratuity offered at the Claimant's discretion, over and above any compulsory levy, is repayable up to one-tenth of the qualifying amount to which it relates, calculated before the gratuity itself is added; a discretionary gratuity exceeding this proportion requires a written explanation from the Claimant at the time of submission, addressing the circumstance that justified departing from the ordinary proportion, such as an unusually large group or exceptional service under difficult circumstances. This clause should be read together with the provisions governing the underlying category of expense to which the levy or gratuity attaches, since eligibility of the levy or gratuity is always derivative of, and cannot exceed, the eligibility of the cost it accompanies.

4.5 Team Offsite Events

Costs associated with an organised offsite event for a Claimant's immediate team — encompassing venue hire, catering, and associated activities — are repayable where the event has been authorised in advance by a member of management at or above the level of department head, and where a per-head budget for the event has been agreed before it takes place. Costs materially exceeding the agreed per-head budget require further authorisation at the same level before they are incurred, rather than being justified retrospectively once the event has taken place. This clause is distinct from the provisions on customer hospitality and staff sustenance elsewhere in this document, which address smaller-scale and more routine occasions rather than organised team events of this kind, and should be applied instead of, rather than in addition to, those provisions for an event falling within its scope.

4.6 Extended Trip Per Diem

For a sanctioned journey away from the Claimant's usual base that extends across more than one calendar day, the Claimant may elect to claim sustenance on a flat daily basis rather than itemising each individual occasion of sustenance separately, at a daily figure communicated separately by the Finance function for the destination in question. Once this election is made for a given trip, the Claimant may not additionally claim individual meals under the ordinary sustenance provisions for the same days of that trip; the two mechanisms are mutually exclusive for the same period. This daily-figure approach is intended to reduce the administrative burden of itemising numerous small claims across a multi-day trip and is available only where the trip genuinely spans more than one calendar day; a single-day journey, however long, should be claimed under the ordinary sustenance provisions instead. Claimants electing this approach are not required to retain itemised proof-of-purchase for individual occasions of sustenance during the elected days, though the fact of travel itself must still be evidenced.

4.7 Large-Group Client Hospitality

Where a dining occasion for external counterparts involves more than six attendees in total, inclusive of Claimants and counterparts, the ordinary per-head ceiling for customer hospitality continues to apply, but documented pre-authorisation from a member of management at or above the level of department head is additionally required before the occasion takes place. This additional requirement reflects the materially higher aggregate cost such occasions can represent and the correspondingly greater need for oversight before the commitment is made. Where the size of the group could not reasonably have been anticipated at the time of booking — for instance, where additional counterparts joined without advance notice — Finance retains discretion to accept the claim without prior authorisation, provided the circumstances are clearly explained in the submission. This clause operates in addition to, not instead of, the general provisions on customer hospitality (dining), which continue to govern the underlying per-head eligibility and the recording of the counterpart's identity and commercial rationale.

Air travel

6.1 Air Travel Cabin Class

The standard cabin class for which the cost of air travel is repayable, in connection with a sanctioned work journey, is the most basic fare class offered by the carrier on the relevant route, commonly marketed as the economy or equivalent tier. Any elevated cabin tier — including premium economy, business, or first class — requires documented pre-authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor, obtained before the booking is made. Pre-authorisation granted after the fact, once the booking has already been confirmed, will not be accepted save in genuinely exceptional circumstances at Finance's discretion, such as an operational requirement that arose with insufficient notice to obtain prior sign-off. Factors that may support pre-authorisation for an elevated tier include, without limitation, a flight duration exceeding a certain number of hours, a Claimant's documented medical circumstances, or a demonstrated absence of the standard tier at the time of booking on the required dates. The onus rests with the Claimant to obtain and retain evidence of pre-authorisation and to submit it together with the underlying fare confirmation.

Hotels and accommodation

7.1 Work-Related Lodging

Overnight lodging secured in connection with a sanctioned work journey is repayable up to SGD 300 for each night of stay, inclusive of standard taxes and service charges levied by the establishment but exclusive of incidental charges such as minibar consumption, laundry, or entertainment services, which are not repayable under any clause of this document. Where the nightly rate at the chosen establishment exceeds this ceiling — whether because of location, availability at the time of booking, or the standard of accommodation selected — the excess requires documented pre-authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor, obtained and recorded before the booking is confirmed wherever practicable. A booking made without such pre-authorisation, where the rate exceeds the ceiling, will have the excess disallowed regardless of the underlying justification, save in genuinely exceptional circumstances at Finance's discretion. Claimants are expected to book through the company's designated channels where these are available, as doing so typically secures negotiated rates below the general ceiling and simplifies the reconciliation of the claim against the underlying booking confirmation.

7.2 Extended-Stay Accommodation

Where a sanctioned work journey requires lodging for a continuous period exceeding seven nights at the same location, the Claimant should, wherever practicable, seek an extended-stay or similar longer-term accommodation arrangement rather than continuing to book on a standard nightly basis, since such arrangements typically secure a materially lower effective nightly rate. The general nightly ceiling set out in the provisions on work-related lodging continues to apply to the effective nightly rate of an extended-stay arrangement, calculated by dividing the total arrangement cost by the number of nights covered, rather than to any single night in isolation. A Claimant who continues to book on a standard nightly basis throughout a stay exceeding seven nights, where an extended-stay arrangement was reasonably available, may have the claim queried by Finance on the basis that a more cost-effective option was not pursued.

Ground transport and local travel

5.1 Ground Conveyance for Work Journeys

Fares paid for hired ground conveyance — including metered vehicles, ride-hailing services, and comparable private-hire arrangements — are repayable where the journey undertaken is genuinely connected to the Claimant's duties, such as travel between office locations, to and from a client site, or to and from a transport terminal in connection with a sanctioned trip. Ordinary commuting between a Claimant's residence and their habitual place of work is not repayable under this or any other clause of this document, regardless of the mode of conveyance used or the time of day at which it occurs, save for the narrow after-hours exception described separately. Claimants are expected to select the most cost-effective reasonable option available at the time; a materially more expensive premium service where a standard equivalent was readily available may be queried by Finance. Journeys undertaken for a mixture of personal and work reasons on the same trip should be apportioned, with only the work-related portion claimed; refer to the provisions on combined proof-of-purchase for guidance on how such apportionment should be recorded and justified in the submission.

5.3 After-Hours Conveyance

As a narrow exception to the general rule that ordinary commuting is not repayable, conveyance taken directly from the Claimant's place of duty to their residence may be repaid where the Claimant's working day concludes at or after 22:00. This exception exists in recognition of the reduced availability and increased cost of public transport alternatives late in the evening, and the safety considerations associated with late-night travel. To rely on this exception, the Claimant must record, at the time of the claim, the operational reason the working day extended to that hour — for example, a critical deadline, an overseas call scheduled to align with another time zone, or an unplanned incident requiring resolution outside ordinary hours. A working day that concludes before 22:00 does not qualify, even where the Claimant subjectively felt the day had been unusually demanding. This clause is not a substitute for, and should not be confused with, the general provisions on ground conveyance for work journeys, under which travel during the working day for a business purpose remains separately repayable regardless of the hour.

5.2 Personal Vehicle Mileage

Where a Claimant uses a personally owned vehicle for a sanctioned work journey rather than hired conveyance or public transport, a mileage-based allowance may be claimed in place of actual fuel or running costs, calculated at the standard per-kilometre rate published from time to time by the Finance function and available on request. This allowance is intended to cover fuel, wear, and incidental running costs collectively, and no separate claim for fuel, servicing, or similar running costs may be made in addition to it for the same journey. Ordinary commuting between the Claimant's residence and habitual place of work remains excluded on the same basis as set out in the general provisions on ground conveyance, regardless of which vehicle or mode is used to undertake it. Claimants relying on this clause should retain a simple record of the journeys undertaken, including origin, destination, and distance, sufficient to support the claim if queried.

5.4 Ride-Sharing and Pooled Transport

Where two or more Claimants travelling to the same destination for the same work purpose share a single hired ground conveyance, the fare should be claimed once by a single nominated Claimant among the group and apportioned or reimbursed internally between the travelling colleagues, rather than each colleague separately claiming the full fare. This clause exists to avoid duplicate reimbursement of what is, in substance, a single journey shared between colleagues. Where colleagues are unable to share a single conveyance because of genuinely divergent onward destinations or timing, each may claim separately under the general provisions on ground conveyance for work journeys, and this clause does not apply. Claimants sharing a conveyance under this clause should note in their submission the names of the colleagues with whom the journey was shared, so that Finance can identify and reconcile against any related claims from the same journey.

Client entertainment

10.0 Non-Dining Customer Hospitality

Hospitality extended to an external counterpart that does not take the form of a shared meal — for instance, tickets to an event, admission to a venue, or a comparable experience offered in a commercial relationship-building context — requires three elements to be recorded before the expense is incurred, rather than after the fact: the identity of the counterpart or the organisation they represent, the commercial rationale for the occasion, and documented pre-authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor. This requirement for advance authorisation, rather than after-the-fact justification, distinguishes this clause from the provisions on customer hospitality at a dining occasion, reflecting the typically higher and less easily bounded cost of experiences falling within this clause. A claim submitted for an occasion of this kind where pre-authorisation was not obtained beforehand cannot be cured by obtaining authorisation retrospectively; the claim falls outside the scope of this clause entirely and should not be approved on the basis of this clause, regardless of how compelling the underlying commercial rationale may appear in hindsight.

Training, conferences and professional development

11.1 External Learning and Gatherings

Fees paid to enrol in a learning programme, course, or professional gathering delivered by an external provider are repayable only where the subject matter is genuinely pertinent to the Claimant's current duties or a role the Claimant is being actively prepared for, and only where documented authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor has been obtained and recorded before the enrolment is confirmed. Relevance to the Claimant's duties should be assessed by reference to the actual content of the programme rather than its general subject area alone; a programme that is broadly related to the Claimant's field but does not address matters connected to their actual responsibilities may still fail this requirement. Cancellation or no-show fees arising from a Claimant's own failure to attend an otherwise-authorised programme are not repayable save in genuinely exceptional circumstances, such as a documented illness communicated to the provider within any cancellation window the provider allows. Travel and lodging incurred in connection with attending such a programme away from the Claimant's usual base should be claimed separately under the relevant provisions of this document governing travel and accommodation, rather than bundled into the enrolment fee claimed under this clause.

11.2 Professional Body Membership

Annual membership fees paid to a recognised professional body directly relevant to a Claimant's role may be repaid where documented authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor has been obtained, confirming the relevance of the body to the Claimant's duties. This clause is distinct from the provisions on external learning and gatherings, which address one-off enrolment fees for courses and events rather than ongoing membership; a professional body's own conferences or courses, where separately charged, should instead be assessed under those provisions. Where a membership confers a personal professional designation or qualification that continues to benefit the Claimant after they leave the company's employment, Finance may take this into account in deciding whether, and to what extent, repayment is appropriate, though this does not of itself disqualify an otherwise-eligible membership.

11.3 Internal Certification Programmes

Enrolment in a certification or training programme delivered internally by the company's own Learning and Development function, as distinct from an external provider, does not require the documented supervisor authorisation set out in the general provisions on external learning and gatherings, since such programmes are understood to already be curated for relevance to roles within the company. A Claimant enrolling in an internal programme should still record their enrolment through the designated internal system, where one exists, though this is an administrative step rather than a condition of eligibility under this document. Where an internally delivered programme carries an associated cost payable to a third party — for instance, where an external facilitator has been engaged to deliver an otherwise internal programme — that cost should be assessed under the general provisions on external learning and gatherings rather than this clause, since the third-party cost element takes the claim outside the scope of a purely internal programme.

Parking, tolls and related road charges

12.1 Vehicle Standing and Road-Usage Charges

Charges levied for the standing of a vehicle, and levies imposed for the use of toll roads or comparable infrastructure, are repayable where incurred in the course of a genuine work journey, on the same basis as the underlying journey itself would be repayable under the provisions on ground conveyance. Penalty notices of any kind — including those issued for contraventions of vehicle-standing restrictions, moving-traffic contraventions, or any other regulatory infringement — are never repayable under this or any other clause of this document, regardless of the circumstances in which they were incurred or whether the underlying journey was itself a legitimate business one; the company does not indemnify Claimants against the consequences of regulatory non-compliance. Where a Claimant uses their own vehicle for a work journey rather than hired conveyance, charges of the kind addressed by this clause remain repayable on the same basis, though the running costs of the vehicle itself are addressed, where applicable, under a separate mileage-based arrangement that falls outside the scope of this document.

12.2 Long-Term Parking Arrangements

Where a Claimant's role genuinely requires sufficiently frequent use of vehicle standing facilities at a particular location that a season pass or other long-term arrangement would be more cost-effective than repeated single-use charges, such an arrangement may be repaid subject to documented authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor confirming the underlying operational need, obtained before the arrangement is entered into. This clause is distinct from the general provisions on vehicle standing and road-usage charges, which address single-use charges incurred on a per-journey basis; a long-term arrangement entered into without the authorisation this clause requires should instead be assessed, if at all, under those general provisions and only to the extent individual journeys can be evidenced. A long-term arrangement covering a period during which the underlying operational need ceases to exist should be discontinued promptly by the Claimant rather than allowed to continue by default.

Office equipment and workplace purchases

8.3 Private Acquisitions

Acquisitions of a private nature — that is, items or services that primarily benefit the Claimant personally rather than serving a genuine business purpose — fall outside the scope of this document in their entirety and are never repayable, irrespective of the circumstances in which they were purchased. This exclusion applies with equal force where a private acquisition appears on the same proof-of-purchase as an otherwise-eligible business cost; in such cases, only the business-related portion may be claimed, following the apportionment guidance found in the provisions on combined proof-of-purchase. The exclusion also applies where a Claimant has described a private acquisition in terms that suggest a business connection; the description offered by the Claimant does not, of itself, alter the underlying nature of the item purchased. Where the description provided in a submission does not appear, on its face, to match the item shown on the accompanying documentation, the submission should be treated under the provisions addressing such inconsistencies rather than assessed under this clause alone, since a mismatch of this kind may itself indicate an attempt to claim a private acquisition as a business cost.

8.1 Workplace Apparatus

Apparatus reasonably required for a Claimant to carry out their duties — spanning items such as computing peripherals, ergonomic furniture, and similar tools of the role — is repayable where a genuine operational need is apparent from the description of the item and its intended use. A single item of apparatus costing more than SGD 200 requires documented authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor, recorded and retained together with the claim; this threshold applies per item rather than per submission, so that a claim comprising several items each below the threshold does not require authorisation even where their combined total exceeds it, provided each is genuinely a separate item rather than components of a single higher-value purchase artificially split across line items to avoid the requirement. Apparatus acquired under this clause is understood to remain company property notwithstanding that it may be kept at the Claimant's usual place of work or, where remote or hybrid arrangements apply, at a location agreed with the Claimant's supervisor. This clause is concerned with tools of the role generally; digital-tool access fees of a recurring nature are instead addressed under the separate provisions on such fees.

8.4 Home Office Equipment Stipend

A Claimant whose usual place of work has been formally agreed as their home, in whole or in part, may claim a one-off stipend toward the cost of establishing a suitable home working environment, up to a ceiling communicated separately by the Human Resources function and reviewed periodically. This stipend is distinct from, and not additive to, the general provisions on workplace apparatus, and may not be claimed twice for the same item under both clauses. Items eligible under this stipend are limited to those genuinely necessary to establish a functional and ergonomically appropriate workspace, such as a desk, a chair, or lighting suited to work purposes, and exclude general household items such as furnishings unrelated to the immediate working area. This stipend is available once per Claimant per home-working arrangement, rather than on a recurring basis, save where the Claimant's role or working arrangement changes materially.

8.2 Specialised Technical Equipment

Apparatus of a specialised or technical nature — going beyond the ordinary computing peripherals and furniture addressed by the general provisions on workplace apparatus, and instead comprising equipment specific to a particular technical function such as laboratory instruments or specialised measurement devices — is subject to a higher authorisation threshold of SGD 500 rather than the general SGD 200 figure, in recognition of the more specialised procurement judgement such equipment typically requires. A Claimant uncertain whether a given item falls within this specialised category rather than the general provisions should seek guidance from their supervisor before purchase; Finance's own determination of which threshold applies, made at the point the claim is assessed, is final. Authorisation for equipment falling within this clause should be obtained from a supervisor with relevant technical or budgetary oversight of the function in question, rather than defaulting automatically to the Claimant's direct line manager where that individual does not hold such oversight.

Software and digital services

9.1 Digital Tool Access Fees

Recurring fees paid for access to digital tools or online services required for a Claimant's work — commonly billed on a monthly or similar cycle — may be repaid up to SGD 50 per month where the operational justification for the tool is recorded at the time of the first claim relating to it. Where a fee arises from an annual or other longer-term commitment, or where a monthly-equivalent fee exceeds SGD 50, documented authorisation from the Claimant's supervisor is required before the commitment is entered into or the first payment is claimed. This clause is distinct from the provisions on workplace apparatus, which address physical tools of the role rather than ongoing digital access; a single purchase of software under a perpetual licence, rather than a recurring subscription, should instead be assessed as apparatus. Claimants are reminded that a recurring commitment entered into under this clause continues to accrue liability for the company for as long as it remains active, and are expected to cancel any such commitment promptly once the underlying operational need has ended, rather than allowing it to continue by default.

9.2 Mobile Communications Allowance

Where a Claimant's role genuinely requires regular use of a personal mobile device for work purposes, a fixed monthly allowance toward the associated communications costs may be claimed, at a rate communicated separately by the Finance function, in lieu of itemised reimbursement of the underlying phone bill. A Claimant receiving a company-issued mobile device and associated plan is not eligible to claim this allowance in addition for the same period, since the underlying need is already met. This allowance is intended to cover ordinary voice, messaging, and data usage connected to the Claimant's duties, and does not extend to the cost of acquiring the handset itself, which should instead be assessed, where a genuine business need exists, under the provisions on workplace apparatus.

Business gifts and promotional items

10.1 Goodwill Tokens

Tokens of goodwill extended by a Claimant to an external party in a commercial context — for example, in connection with a significant milestone in a business relationship — may be repaid up to SGD 100 in value, provided the identity of the recipient and the commercial rationale for the gesture are recorded at the time of the claim. Currency, or anything readily convertible into currency such as stored-value cards or vouchers redeemable across a broad range of goods, falls outside the scope of this clause and is never repayable as a token of goodwill regardless of its value, owing to the difficulty of demonstrating that such an item served a genuine relationship-building purpose rather than amounting to a disguised payment. Tokens extended to colleagues within the company, as distinct from external parties, are not addressed by this clause and should generally be regarded as a private matter for the Claimant rather than a repayable business cost, save where a separate, specifically authorised staff-recognition budget applies, which falls outside the scope of this document.

Foreign currency and exchange-rate handling

13.1 Non-Home Denomination Claims

Where an expense is incurred in a currency other than the company's home currency, the Claimant must record the transaction in the submission using the denomination and figure exactly as they appear on the original supporting documentation, without performing any conversion themselves. Conversion of the eligible amount into the home currency for reimbursement purposes is performed centrally by the Finance function, using the company's sanctioned rate-setting procedure applicable on or around the date the expense was incurred, rather than any rate the Claimant may have been personally charged by a card issuer or currency exchange. This centralised approach ensures consistency across all Claimants regardless of the particular payment method or provider used for a given transaction. All other eligibility rules found elsewhere in this document continue to apply in full to a claim denominated in a non-home currency; this clause governs only the mechanics of recording and converting the figure, and does not itself create any additional entitlement or exemption from the substantive conditions attached to the underlying category of expense.

Weekend, public-holiday and after-hours claims

14.1 Non-Working Day Costs

A cost that arises on a day that is not an ordinary working day for the Claimant — whether a weekend day or a day gazetted as a public holiday — is not automatically excluded from reimbursement, but the Claimant submitting such a claim must set out, at the time of submission, the precise operational reason the expenditure was necessary on that particular day rather than during the ordinary working week. A general assertion that the work was 'important' or 'urgent', without further specificity, does not satisfy this requirement; the reason offered should identify the concrete circumstance — such as a scheduled event that could only take place on that day, or a deadline falling on the following working day that necessitated preparation over the weekend. Where the underlying category of expense carries its own conditions elsewhere in this document, those conditions continue to apply in addition to, not instead of, the requirement set out in this clause; a non-working-day claim must satisfy both this clause and the substantive provisions governing the category of expense in question.

Mixed business and personal receipts

15.1 Combined Proof-of-Purchase

Where a single piece of supporting documentation covers both a genuine business cost and one or more private items, only the portion attributable to the business cost may be claimed; the presence of a private item on the same documentation does not disqualify the business portion, provided the two can be clearly distinguished. The Claimant submitting such a claim must identify, at the time of submission, which specific items or line items on the documentation relate to the business purpose being claimed, and must state the resulting sum being claimed, rather than submitting the combined total and leaving the apportionment to be inferred. Where the documentation does not itemise individual items clearly enough to support this apportionment, the Claimant should provide a reasonable estimate together with an explanation of the basis for it; Finance retains discretion to query an apportionment that appears disproportionate to the description provided. This clause operates alongside, rather than in place of, the general exclusion of private acquisitions from reimbursement; it exists specifically to address the common situation where business and private items happen to appear on the same receipt or invoice.

Missing, unreadable, duplicate and altered receipts

16.1 Indeterminate Documentary Detail

Where a detail essential to assessing a claim — such as the total amount, the date, or the identity of the vendor — cannot be confidently determined from the supporting documentation provided, whether because the documentation is faded, cropped, damaged, or otherwise unclear, the claim must not be assessed on the basis of an assumed or inferred value for that detail. Instead, the submission should be referred back to the Claimant for clarification where the missing detail is one the Claimant can reasonably be expected to supply or confirm, or escalated to Finance Review for manual determination where the detail cannot be reliably established even with the Claimant's input, or where its absence raises a broader question about the reliability of the submission as a whole. This clause reflects a general principle that runs throughout this document: no figure, date, or other material fact should ever be guessed at in order to reach a decision, however plausible the guess might seem, since doing so undermines the integrity of the control that this document as a whole is intended to provide.

Relocation and mobility

18.1 Relocation Assistance

Where the company requires a Claimant to relocate their principal residence to take up a role at a different office location, reasonable costs directly associated with that relocation may be repaid subject to a separate written agreement entered into with the Claimant before the move takes place, setting out the specific items covered and any applicable ceiling. In the absence of such a written agreement, no cost associated with a change of residence is repayable under this or any other clause of this document, regardless of whether the underlying move was connected to the Claimant's employment. Costs falling within the scope of a relocation agreement typically include, without limitation, the physical transport of household effects and short-term temporary accommodation bridging the move, but exclude costs of a personal or discretionary nature such as the acquisition of new furnishings. This clause is administered separately from the general expense-reimbursement process described elsewhere in this document.

Staff benefits and wellbeing

19.1 Staff Wellness Benefit

A discretionary annual allowance toward activities supporting a Claimant's general wellbeing, such as fitness memberships or comparable activities, may be available subject to a separate benefits schedule maintained by the Human Resources function, which sets out the applicable ceiling and eligible categories of activity from time to time. This benefit is administered outside the general expense-reimbursement process described in this document and should not be claimed through the same channel as an ordinary business expense; Claimants should refer to the separate benefits schedule for the correct submission process. Costs falling within this benefit are not, for the avoidance of doubt, business expenses within the meaning of this document, notwithstanding that they may be processed through a similar reimbursement mechanism.

Community and charitable contributions

20.1 Charitable Contribution Matching

Where a Claimant makes a personal donation to a registered charitable organisation, the company may match that donation up to an annual ceiling per Claimant, subject to a separate charitable-matching scheme administered by the Human Resources function rather than through the general expense-reimbursement process described in this document. A request for matching must be submitted together with evidence of the underlying personal donation, within the timeframe specified by the scheme, and is assessed against the scheme's own eligibility criteria rather than the provisions of this document. This clause is included here for completeness only and does not form part of the expense-reimbursement provisions administered by the Finance function.

17. Escalation and Exceptions

Where the available evidence or the sections above do not support a reliable determination, or where two sections of this policy appear to conflict for the same claim, the claim is escalated to Finance Review for a manual decision. No section of this policy may be applied by inference to a cost it does not address.
